

Rumba

The Rumba is a cante de ida y vuelta - a round trip song - which most likely arrived in southern Spanish ports from Cuba and Puerto Rico. Gypsies and flamenco artists then incorporated the rhythm and percussion into flamenco dance steps to create a hybrid Spanish/Latin American form. Popular flamenco singer Pepe Marchena helped to popularize the song in the 1950s through 1970s.

Numerous contemporary flamenco groups, including the French singing group, the Gipsy Kings, the Spanish trio, Ketama, flamenco guitarist Paco de Lucía, and pop flamenco singer Manzanita and others have recorded a number of popular rumbas.

Rumba dance steps are sensual, fun and lighthearted, and include wry or sexy dance movements with hip rolls and hip juts. The rhythm for the rumba is 2/4 or 4/4, with accentuation varying from a typical tango to the clavé rhythm of Latin American rumbas. Rumbas are fiesta dances, and each dancer takes a turn while other dancers perform palmas. Percussion instruments, like the rhythm box the cajón, are often included in a total rumba performance, which includes dancing, singing, palmas, guitar playing and percussion. Guitarists often employ a slapping technique on the top of the guitar that creates an infectious, syncopated rhythm.

Rumba Lyrics:

Hazme con los ojos señas
Que en algunas ocasiones
Los ojos sirven de lengua.

Make signs to me with your eyes
For on many occasions
The eyes can speak.
